when disaster strikes,
staying connected is critical. That's why AT&T is there for our customers and our communities.

keeping people connected in the wake of natural disasters

In times of crisis, communication is vital. From first-responder emergency personnel to a customer reaching out to a loved one to say "I'm okay," keeping people connected is what we do.

Nationally, AT&T has responded to more than 45 natural disasters over the past year, including the devastating wildfires in California.

In October 2007, as wildfires raged across San Diego and Southern California, we responded with the largest reconstructive effort in our 130 years here.

The people of AT&T set out to help families by mobilizing 1,100 technicians to support service in the region, and providing 2,000 AT&T GoPhones® and 5,000 calling cards to residents ordered to evacuate.

We also donated $150,000 to Southern California chapters of the American Red Cross.

In the aftermath of the fires, AT&T crews worked around-the-clock, replacing more than 500,000 feet of fiber optic cable, 1.5 million feet of copper and 2,000 telephone poles.
